Specific qualities sought from candidates include the following:

- Significant scholarly contributions in any area of management studies. Currently it would be helpful if this included one or more of the following areas of expertise: organization behaviour, organization theory, and/or human resource management; but strong candidates with expertise in any area of management studies will be considered. It is expected that applicants will identify a specific category as a primary area of expertise, but the ability to handle manuscripts across a wide range topics and domains is important.
- Extensive experience as a reviewer for management journals
- Demonstrated administrative skills, capacity to handle a demanding workload and to meet deadlines.
- Must also be able to work constructively with authors, reviewers and the editorial team.

Interviews will be held in London on Friday, 24th June or at the AoM Conference in Anaheim, USA. The panel will consist of SAMS Council Members, JMS General Editors and the Editorial Manager. For those selected for interview, reasonable travel expenses will be paid on production of receipts.
